

POLICE TO WATCH FOR "SPEEDERS"

Many Complaints Made That Autos Run Too Fast and Officers Will Be on The Guard.

ARE PREPARED TO PROSECUTE

Department Has Arranged a Table Showing Distance and Time For Lawful Speed.

The state law prohibiting the speeding of automobiles upon the public streets will be more rigidly enforced here than ever before, and with this in view Chief Abell has instructed the members of the police force to keep a careful watch for all automobiles who travel through the streets at an excessive rate of speed. A number of complaints have been filed with the police recently regarding the racing and speeding upon the streets and the officers have decided to put a stop to it.

The law provides that an automobile shall not move faster than eight miles an hour in the business district of the city and fifteen miles in the residence portion. It is commonly estimated that the average automobile is capable to run as slowly as eight miles an hour and as the officers are cognizant of this fact they will give the automobilists the benefit of the doubt so long as the machines are run at a reasonable speed. However, when a driver operates his car at a dangerous speed he may expect to hear from the officers. The police realize that as soon as the new streets are completed the average driver will be tempted to run his car a little faster than he would upon a rough dirt road but they are determined that in spite of the temptation the cars shall not be operated in such a way that pedestrians and occupants of other vehicles will be endangered.

The speeding upon the local streets has not been limited to Seymour citizens alone for frequently tourists pass through the streets much faster than is permitted by the statute. The police have further decided that these visitors shall obey the law the same as persons living in the city. As Seymour is on the main road from Indianapolis to Louisville and from Indianapolis to French Lick Springs, a large number of tourists pass through the city each week, and oftentimes some of them literally shoot through the streets with the "cut outs" wide open.

In the past the officers have been handicapped in prosecuting "speeders" in that they have had no way in which they could prove to a jury that the defendant was driving faster than permitted by the law. However, in order to make all future cases stand, they have prepared a table showing just how far a car can run in a given time in order to be in the limits of the law. This table shows how many feet a driver can go in a minute at eight miles an hour and at fifteen miles an hour. Hereafter, whenever an automobilist is suspected of exceeding the speed limit the officers will mark the distance covered in a minute and if that distance exceeds the number of feet shown on the table they will be prepared to prove that the driver has violated the law.

AD CAR FOR FOUR STATES TOUR REACHES SEYMOUR

Big Nyberg Six is Homeward Bound After Covering Over Twelve Hundred Miles.

The "Nyberg Six," acting as advance advertising car for the Indiana Four States tour, came into the city today covered with a liberal amount of dust and dirt. This car left Indianapolis July 2 to blaze the trail with posters, newspaper advertisements and circulars for the coming of the regular tour which leaves Indianapolis, July 9 and arrives here on July 24. The Nyberg car carried Arthur Burrell of Indianapolis, who handles the advertising of the tour, and E. E. Arbuckle of the Nyberg Company who is driving and representing the interest of that concern. In the car were a large bundle of display posters and hundreds of pounds of metal plate matter to be used in advertising. Although the car has made more than 1200 miles since it left Indianapolis, the motor was still humming to the satisfaction of the driver.

One of the features of the Four States tour that is attracting considerable interest will be the large pipe organ carried upon one of the Nyberg trucks and which will be played from time to time on the trip by a skilled musician.

Mr. Burrell and Mr. Arbuckle expected to reach Indianapolis this evening. They intended to make one stop at Indianapolis and one at Franklin before completing the trip. They left Franklin, Ky. this morning and said that they had had a very pleasant trip.

PUSHMOBILES BECOMING POPULAR WITH THE BOYS.

Young Automobile Enthusiasts Are Planning a Race With Their New Machines.

The automobile craze has struck the younger generation in Seymour, and as the majority of the boys do not own real automobiles they have adopted a substitute known in boy parlance as a "pushmobile." While these may be purchased from dealers, some of the boys with an ingenious turn of mind manufacture their own machines. As a result there is a scarcity of old wheels, discarded cans and other equipment which is used in the construction of the machine.

The pushmobile, like the regular automobile, is made along various lines, although most of them are constructed to imitate the racing models. They are equipped with a hood and a steering wheel and the power is furnished by the boys who push the machines by means of a long pole.

Some of the boys in the north part of the city have taken special interest in the pushmobiles, and are planning a race on North Chestnut street as soon as the new street is completed. A number of boys have already indicated that they will take part in the race which promises to be one of considerable interest to the young pushmobile enthusiasts.

The demand for wheat sacks has been very heavy today which indicates that the harvest is on in earnest. Several loads of new wheat were brought here today and hundreds of bushels will be brought to the city next week. The men who have been working in the fields declare that the heat is intense, and would be almost insufferable if it were not for the breeze.

LIFE'S DISAPPOINTMENTS

NO VERDICTS GIVEN IN AUTOMOBILE SPEED CASES

Clifford Starr is Acquitted and Jury Disagreed in Case of Frank Stinson.

A verdict of acquittal by one jury and a disagreement of the other were the results of the two cases tried yesterday afternoon before Mayor Swope for violating the speed ordinance. One case was filed against Frank Stinson and after the jury took six ballots reported that they were unable to come to an agreement. The other defendant was found not guilty.

The cases involved practically the same facts, as it was brought out that Stinson and Starr were alleged to be racing on South Chestnut street but the cases were tried by different juries.

Stinson's case was called first, and while several of the witnesses testified that he was running his automobile about twenty-five miles an hour, others testified that he was not going more than fifteen miles an hour in the residence portion of the city. On the first ballot the jury stood 11 to 1 for acquittal, but later 10 to 2 for acquittal and after taking six ballots the jury reported that they would be unable to agree. As soon as this report was made they were dismissed by Mayor Swope.

After the Stinson case was heard and placed in the hands of the jury, Starr's case was called in the council chamber, and after the evidence was heard the jury gave a verdict of not guilty.

NEW FACTORY WILL START NEXT WEEK

Expert Will Be Here Monday to Install Another Big Machine For Seymour Wood Working Co.

SAW MILL NOW IN OPERATION

Equipment Has Been Purchased For Manufacture of Broom Handles and Clothes Pins.

The Seymour Wood Working Company, the latest addition to Seymour's manufacturing enterprises, expects to start its new factory the latter part of next week or the first of the following week. A number of new machines have been ordered and the last one has arrived in the city and will be installed by an expert, who will come to this city Monday. The machinery has been ordered for sometime but there has been considerable delay as some of the equipment was made to the special order of the local company.

The machine which has just arrived will be used for the manufacture of broom handles and is the latest model. It has a capacity of about 10,000 broom handles per day. The machine works automatically, and the square strips of wood which are fed into the machine on one side appear on the opposite side of the machine in round broom handles ready for the trade. The handles which are used for the finer grades of brooms are placed into what is known as the tumbling machine where they are polished before being placed upon the market.

The company has spent about $2,000 in repairs alone upon the building and has also expended a large sum for equipment. It is expected that it will employ about twenty men as soon as all the machines are in operation and all of the departments of the plant are running.

A saw mill was installed several weeks ago and this has been running for sometime getting the material in readiness for the factory. The saw mill is operated exclusively for the factory and will do no outside work. Various kinds of wood will be used in the manufacture of the different articles and already a large amount of black gum has been hauled to the lumber yards. This will be used in making chair slats, while the broom handles will be made of beech.

GRAND RAPIDS HIT BY BIG CYCLONE

More Than Forty Persons Are Injured and Much Property is Damaged.

PANIC IN MARKET FOLLOWS

Storm Swept Across the Resident District And Many Homes Are Ruined.

Grand Rapids, July 13.—Grand Rapids was hard hit early today by a cyclone that injured forty or more persons and did thousands of dollars' worth of damage. The storm entered the city from the southwest about 4 o'clock. The first place struck was the city market and the Grand Rapids Central League baseball park adjoining.

The market was crowded with farmers and their teams, as trading had just begun. As the storm struck, the roof of the ball park grand stand was lifted and hurled to pieces, being scattered all over the market. A panic followed. Horses were killed and a great many persons were hurt, some so badly they had to be sent to the hospital. The police reserves and fire department were called out. The storm then swept across the town, striking the best residence district.

RARE OLD COIN

An Heirloom in The Beem Family Over 100 Years Old.

Mr. V. L. Beem of Medora, was in Seymour this morning. He carried with him a deer skin purse with a few old coins. Among the coins is a Spanish piece bearing the date of 1811 and inscription Ferdinand VII Die Gratia. This coin was given to Mr. Beem's father, Michael Beem, on the day he was married in Vallonia. It was one of his wedding presents, and this and the purse have never been out of the family. The deer skin purse, in which the coin is kept, was made from the hide of a deer killed by Mr. Beem's father. Mr. Beem, who now owns the coin and the purse, is the only one living of fourteen children in his father's family, and he is justly proud of the coin and purse as the family heirloom.

Best Manner in Which to Handle Coal to Maintain Steam Pressure Considered.

S. A. Rogers, Road Foreman of Engines of the B. & O. S-W., held a meeting of the firemen in the assembly room of the B. & O. office building Friday afternoon for the purpose of discussing the fuel question. Twenty-three firemen and two engineers were present and entered into the discussions. The purpose of the meeting is to give the younger firemen the advantage of the experience of the older men who gave their opinions as to the best way to handle the coal so as to maintain the required pressure of steam.

The firemen find these meetings very helpful, and similar sessions will be held once each month.

A recent report of the Baltimore and Ohio system shows that since the organization of the various safety committees the number of deaths of employees has been reduced from sixteen to seven per month. Upon other railroad systems where similar committees have been organized the number of deaths have also been reduced which facts indicate that the safety committees have been doing some excellent work.

One of the principal reasons why the safety committee plan has been so successful, is that the men, who occupy the hazardous positions, are given an opportunity to make recommendations which they believe will result in the protection of themselves and their fellow workmen. It can be readily seen that an employee of a shop or round house is better acquainted with the local conditions than any official who perhaps inspects the machinery and equipment once or twice a year.

Under the safety committee plan any workman who realizes that a certain piece of machinery is being operated in such a way as to be a menace to the life and limb of employees, may report such suggestion as he believes necessary to the local committee for their approval, and may feel assured that it will be given proper consideration. The result of the work of the safety committee can be seen at the local round house where every exposed cog-wheel or other dangerous parts of machinery have been covered so as to insure the greatest possible safety for the men who must work around them.

Another valuable feature of the safety committee is that the welfare of the passenger is given close and careful attention. The slogan of "Safety First" has been well chosen, for in every department the company aims to provide protection for its employees and passengers before schedule, expense or any other feature is considered.

AMERICAN SOLDIER THE BEST

World's Records for Marksmanship All His, and He is Trained to Act on His Own Initiative.

If there is one big, distinguishing trait of the United States regular, it is individuality. In every one of the great foreign military nations, particularly Germany and Japan, battalion and company officers and enlisted men are carefully trained not to think for themselves. They are used as mere chess pieces under the guidance of a master mind. In this country, where our melting pot has yielded us an extraordinary self-reliant, cool thinking, intensive initiative product, it is only natural that our soldiers should be trained as are our civilians.

The United States army spends annually on rifle target practice five times the sum spent by any other army of an equal number of men. This applies, too, to our field and coast artillery. As a result, no better marksmen can be found than the American soldier and his cousin, the national guardsman, who is trained along the same lines. Every world's fire control and accuracy record with rifle and big gun is today held by the American soldier.

The United States army is small, in accordance with the will of the people not to support a large standing military establishment. But what we have is almost 100 per cent. efficient, the splendid nucleus of the big army of regulars, militia and volunteers which we should place in the field if occasion required. It is only in equipment—quartermaster, commissary, medicine and particularly ordnance stores—that our army is lacking—Leslie's.

SHE COULD NOT REMEMBER

Absent-Minded Woman's Peculiar Reason for Wanting to Be Rung Up on the 'Phone.

Absent-minded persons sorely try the patience of girls in the New Rochelle telephone office. Not long ago a woman confessed herself subject to extreme forgetfulness and requested the day operator on her exchange to ring her up every morning at 9 o'clock. A week later she said: "Central, what was it I wanted you to call me for at 9 o'clock?"

"I don't know," said the girl. "You didn't tell me. You just asked me to call at 9 o'clock."

"Too bad," said the woman. "I know there was something I wanted to do every morning at 9 o'clock, but I can't for the life of me think what it was."

The 9 o'clock calls continued, however, and several days later the woman took central into her confidence again.

"I have found out why I wanted to be called," she said. "A friend had given me a canary and I wanted to make sure of remembering to feed it. The poor little thing is nearly starved. Hereafter when you ring won't you just say, 'Feed the bird,' and I'll go straight and do it!"

Central promised, and the neglected canary is now a plump and contented bird.—New York Times.

Are you going? Where? Ice Cream social at the Vehslage block tomorrow. Surely, wouldn't stay away.

Useful Accomplishments.

Every woman wants a cozy corner all her own—be that corner humble or handsome.

Every woman who does not have the home longing is abnormal. Home is made up of little things.

One of the largest of these little things is the ability to cook wholesome food.

Sewing and music are next. A woman might be as homely as can be, but if she can cook a good dinner, make a dress, and let her moods slip out of her finger tips on a piano, that woman will have a chance for a truly happy home a thousand per cent. better than her beautiful neighbor who cannot make even an apron, and who cooks badly for her family.

So I say to mothers, whether you have money or not, teach your daughters all the useful and necessary things in life, so that they will make good, homelike wives and mothers.

WILL OBSERVE CENTENNIAL OF FORT BENJAMIN HARRISON

Committee Desires Names of All Descendants of Troops Who Served Under Capt. Taylor.

With the assurance of an appropriate observance of the Centennial of the Battle of Fort Harrison, September 2, 3 and 4, 1912, committees are working on the arrangements and compiling names of descendants of the pioneers of the Northwest Territory who participated in the battle. Since the troops under Capt. Zachary Taylor were drawn from the Indiana and Kentucky militia, naturally the historical interest centers largely in those two states. The Fort Harrison Centennial Association of Terre Haute wants addresses of all descendants of them.

Ft. Harrison was built in 1811 by Gen. William Henry Harrison while the army was on its way to Tippecanoe. It formed a base of supplies for the settlers who had moved north from Vincennes. For several years after the Battle of Tippecanoe, Fort Harrison was the frontier post of the United States.

Capt. Zachary Taylor, later hero of the Mexican war, and President of the United States, was in command of the Fort when the Indians attacked September 4, 1812. The small force in the post defeated a greatly superior number of Indians. The battle settled the question of supremacy in the territory and made possible the peaceful settlement of Indiana. It was the last important conflict with the hostile Indians in Indiana.

The Centennial Celebration will open Labor Day and continue three days, with patriotic demonstrations, historical pageants, fireworks, river spectacular, addresses and receptions, and will close with the unveiling of a monument marking the site of the old fort.

BIG CIRCUS VISITED SEYMOUR FRIDAY NIGHT

Came in on Special Train and Departed After Giving Parade and And Two Performances.

A number of people witnessed a big circus in Seymour Friday night. The show company came in on a special train, pitched their tents, gave a parade which extended over a mile or so, gave two performances and took up their stakes and departed.

All of this occurred at Dreamland but was so realistic that the people who witnessed it could easily imagine the show was actually here. The film was very clear and showed the big circus coming into town; the unloading of the cars and just how the tents for the main circus and the side shows were put up. The menagerie consisted of a large number of animals, all of which took part in the long street parade.

The cooking camp and the tent in which the meals were served were very vividly shown and proved interesting to the spectators. The circus was complete in every detail and even showed the peanut vendor and the toy balloon salesman.

Heart to Heart Talks.

By EDWIN A. NYE.

OFF THE TRACK.

The limited goes sixty miles an hour. In the smoker men joke and play cards. The day coaches are crowded and comfortable. The heavy sleepers away to and fro and make a gentle rocking for those who chat and read and nap.

Crash! Engine and cars and flesh and blood are ground together in a tangled, horrid mass of wreckage.

The engine went off the track. Why?

It may have been the curves were too sharp, or the rails too light, or the ballast poor. Slower locomotion might have prevented the accident.

Sixty miles an hour with that roadbed and equipment was too fast. But—The competing line is scheduled at the sixty mile running. Our train must get to the terminal as early as theirs. Open the throttle! Shovel the coal!

Which is typical of our day.

Here is a boy who got to running on a fast schedule. He began in holding out on the cash register. Growing bolder, he made faster time—down grade. By and by the crash. And the crowd halted for a moment to look at the wreck. And his friends murmured, "I didn't think he was so bad as that."

The young man was—

Off the track.

A young girl discards her mother's careful gait. Mother is "old fashioned." The girl goes to places mother has warned her against. The bloom of innocence is brushed from the girl's cheek. And one day a brazen, drunken creature, cursing and shrieking, is loaded into the patrol wagon. A woman is—

Off the track.

A man gets in a hurry to be rich. His father went slowly, carefully, successfully. "Father's methods will not do in this record breaking age. What's the use of toiling and molling and sweating when a quicker way will do the business? So-and-so has speculated successfully. I am as shrewd as he." A pistol shot! Another man is—

Off the track.

Business, society, goes a sixty mile clip, and rather than be sidetracked for safety men will drive their trains into the ditch. They run wild, and there are frequent collisions and wrecks inevitable.

Off the track.

Look out, venturesome plunger, reckless young woman and gay young man. The race is not to the swift alone. Put on the brakes, slow up or before you are aware you may be—

Off the track.

If you are a housewife you cannot reasonably hope to be healthy or beautiful by washing dishes, sweeping and doing housework all day, and crawling into bed dead tired at night. You must get out into the open air and sunlight. If you do this every day and keep your stomach and bowels in good order by taking Chamberlain's Tablets when needed, you will be one both healthy and beautiful. For sale by all dealers.

Elephant Most Intelligent.

The elephant is by a long shot the most intelligent animal under man. Some horses know a great deal, some dogs are exceedingly bright, but for real sense and all-around long-headedness the elephant heads the list. He is not only bright, he is a deep thinker and profound philosopher, and has been known to do things that apparently require nothing less than human intelligence.

And the facts that have to do with natural intelligence, with the wonder of things that our dumb fellow-beings cannot understand, and while you will find much to the credit of the dog, horse or other animal, you will be impressed with the fact that, next to man, the brain-power of the elephant is the greatest among them all.

Buy it now. Chamberlain's Colic, Cholera and Diarrhoea Remedy is almost certain to be needed before the summer is over. Buy it now and be prepared for such an emergency. For sale by all dealers.

Ministerial Economy.

Considering his meagre salary, it was a mystery to economical parish-farmers how the minister could afford to contribute so liberally to the church's social affairs, but another financial expert finally explained that it was a good investment.

"The money he contributes makes these entertainments so attractive," he said, "that the young people fall in love and marry, and he makes it back many times over on the wedding feast."

Fifty Years Ago Today.

July 13.

General N. B. Forrest's Confederate cavalry surprised the Federal garrison at Murfreesboro, Tenn. About 800 Federals surrendered after a stubborn resistance by part of the force. The garrison lost 100 killed and wounded and Forrest 150.

Twenty-five Years Ago Today.

Europe disturbed by war rumors involving Germany, France, Russia and Austria.

SATURDAY NIGHT SERMONS

BY REV. SAMUEL W. PURVIS, D.D.

THE GOSPEL OF SONG.

Text, "Singing and making melody in your heart unto the Lord."—Ephesians V, 19.

Queer, but in the Bible there are more commands to sing than to pray. Paul tells us to "admonish one another in psalms, hymns and spiritual songs." David cries out, "Sing ye to God, all ye kingdoms of the earth." Fifteen sermons and sixty prayers recorded in the Bible and 300 psalms and songs. Possibly that should be our proportion. Song is the language of worship and triumph. Even in sorrow and grief our song may be a minor chord clothed in sackcloth, but when hope triumphs the soul sings in bold and major numbers.

Not all forms of thought can sing. Law courts, houses of legislation, senatorial halls, meetings of trusts, do not begin nor end their sessions with song, a tacit admission perhaps that their business may be too low set for song. Some transactions have no need for wings; they belong to the dust of the earth.

But the love of man and maid make them sing the story of their heart's passion, the harvesters sing amid the rustle of yellow leaf and patter of falling grain, nations sing when the people are thrilled with deep voiced patriotism, and religion must sing or stifle.

Christianity is Tuneful.

Christianity is naturally a singing religion. I often wonder that no artist has given us a picture of the Saviour standing up to lead the singing in that last hymn sung at the feast of the passover immediately before the darkness and agony of Gethsemane, the song of sacrifice, no doubt the one hundred and eighteenth Psalm.

Paul and Silas, scourged and bleeding in dungeon, made the midnight ring with their songs of praise till prison walls rocked and doors were loosed. The volunteer soldier can sing, but not the drafted one.

Christianity has developed a music of its own. Search heathen countries the world over, there is to be found no such music. Christian experience awakens emotions that crave musical expression. Mere word energy is not enough. The words have to be touched into music.

A singing church is a triumphant church. You cannot defeat it. Poverty, persecution, martyrdom, are forgotten in song. Cardinal Newman said the reason Methodism gained such enormous numbers to her fold was because she knew how to sing. Many are won to Christ through song who cannot be touched by preaching. Religion simply has to sing. At the creation the morning stars sang together. At the Saviour's birth the angel sang to the shepherds. Christ sang on his way to death. The early church sang under fire and sword.

Infidelity is Mute.

There is no church anywhere without music and song. The infidel makes himself foolish trying to account for it. There is nothing in his philosophy to explain it. Atheism is songless; infidelity has nothing to sing about, no hope, no joy, no resurrection. Did you ever attend the Sunday services of any of the liberal leagues in our cities? I have. It is funny—no, it is pitiful. Still it is reasonable enough. The usher to whom I spoke about the singing said rather savagely, too, "Why should we sing?" True enough, I thought. Why should they? Neither have I ever heard of a Brahmanic hymn or a Confucian psalmody. The meters of heathendom or savagery, so far as paganism is vocal at all, are not to be compared with the heartiness, fullness and depth of Christian song. There are a spontaneity and an abandon to the singing of Christians that are sadly lacking in any of the musical exercises of paganism.

Ancient Judaism said, "Oh, come, let us sing unto the Lord." The modern Christian explains his own songfulness in the conclusive question, "How can I keep from singing?"

Singing In Heaven.

I know no reason why the songs of earth may not be sung in heaven. When William G. Fisher stood in my choir circle shortly ago I looked at his fine old face and said, "Some day you will lead a heavenly choir, as we sing 'I love to tell the story.'"

"And when in scenes of glory I sing the new, new song 'Twill be the old, old story 'That I have loved so long."

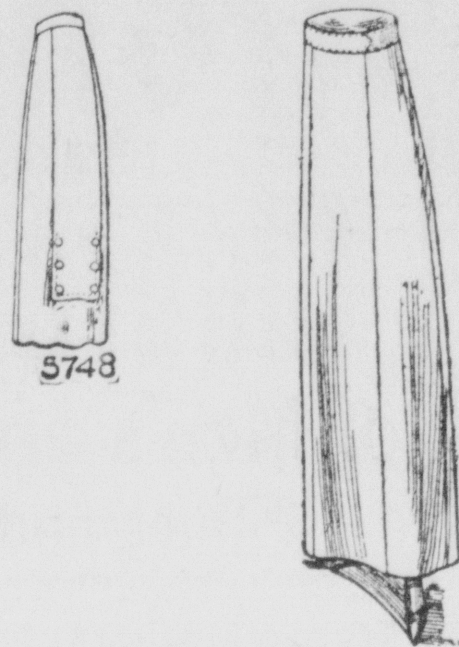

And we'll hear the sweet voice of Florence Nightingale and Jennie Lind and Ira D. Sankey and Robert Lowery, and Cowper will sing:

Then in a nobler, sweeter strain I'll sing thy power to save. When this poor lisping, stammering tongue Lies silent in the grave.

And poor Fanny Crosby, no longer blind, will sing, "Safe In the Arms of Jesus." And the nations will sing too. The tenors of England, the deep, full tones of the Germans, the sopranos of France, and the contraltos of Italy, and the Welsh, every note a spark dropped from the forge of their burning emotions. No race has the gift of song like the Africans. I've heard them in Baltimore, Norfolk and many a southern camp meeting. Yes, Ethiopia will lift up her hands and sing—that will be music for you—the weird, heartbreaking songs of the slave ship and cotton plantation, mingled with the new song of the free. There will be a great multitude that no man can number in the celestial choir in that temple of the skies.

Labor-Saving at Funerals.

"There occurs to me a striking story illustrating the force of habit," said Mr. R. W. Nixon, of Philadelphia, at the New Howard. "It is a railroad story and concerns a general superintendent and a yardmaster.

"One cold winter day some railway officials, while making an inspection of a large yard, stepped for a moment inside a switchman's shanty to get warm. In there, among other men, was a general superintendent, who was known to have a mania for 'scientific management' and the reduction of expenses. As they were leaving the switchman asked the traveling yardmaster, whom he knew:

"Now can ye be telling me who that mon is?"

"That's the general superintendent," the yardmaster replied.

"What do you think of that? He's a fine looking mon, and ye never would believe the tales ye are after hearing about him."

"What have you heard about him, Mike?" was the curious question.

"Why, they do say that he was at the funeral of Mr. Mitchell's wife, and when the six pallbearers come out, he raised his hand and said: 'Hold on a minute, boys, I think ye can get along without two of them.'"

For soreness of the muscles, whether induced by violent exercise or injury, there is nothing better than Chamberlain's Liniment. This liniment also relieves rheumatic pains. For sale by all dealers.

TACT BETTER THAN COMMAND

Good Idea to Let "Less Criticism and More Comradeship" Be Your Guiding Motto.

"Less criticism and more comradeship," would be a helpful maxim for all homes.

It is easy enough to be pleasant to the casual acquaintance, but the great difficulty lies in being decent to those who are devoted to us—to those who are ever willing to forgive our shortcomings. There is no duty above treating your friends courteously and trying to illuminate the general monotony of the lives of those you love.

In home life tact will succeed often where command will fail. Suggestions will go farther than argument. Direction is so much better than dictation. Criticism of loved ones is a vice that takes possession of one like a stimulant, or a drug, once it is encouraged. It may begin in our so-called high moral standard and hatred of sin. But once it becomes a habit, it is indulged in for the satisfaction it gives.

An Eden can be ruined by constant fault-finding, selfishness, and withholding the words of praise. A paradise can be created by small kindnesses and by thinking sweet and helpful thoughts of those about you.

The next time you feel like criticizing a loved one, force yourself to say something complimentary to him instead.

Try it and see if you won't be happier.

Dysentery is always serious and often a dangerous disease, but it can be cured. Chamberlain's Colic, Cholera and Diarrhoea Remedy has cured it even when malignant and epidemic.

WAR REMINISCENCES

CONFLICT AT SAN JACINTO

Alphonse Steele of Lone Star State Tells of Battle That Won Independence for Texas.

The celebration of the anniversary of the battle of San Jacinto was an event of special significance to Alphonse Steele of Mexia, Texas, who is the sole survivor of the little army of Texans who, commanded by General Sam Houston, met and crushed completely the overwhelming force of Mexican soldiers upon that battlefield.

When only 17 years old Steele left Hardin county, Kentucky, where he was born, and went down the Ohio and Mississippi rivers in a boat to Lake Providence, La., where he worked until November, 1835, when he joined a company of volunteers, commanded by Captain Daggett and marched to Old Washington, Texas.

It was found on reaching that place that Texas had not yet declared her independence, and the company of soldiers disbanded. Steele remained in Washington until the Declaration of Independence was signed, whereupon he immediately started for San Antonio to join Travis and aid in defending the Alamo. While on his way he learned that the Alamo had fallen.

In company with other patriots he then proceeded down the Colorado river and joined the army which General Houston was gathering about him. As General Houston and his gathering force of patriots and adventurers moved onward toward the Buffalo bayon and the San Jacinto river, General Santa Ana and his army followed closely, hoping to get the Texans in a close position and make an attack.

The Texas army found itself in a cornered position on April 21, 1836, and in order that it might be a fight to the death the only bridge leading across the water course over which retreat might be made was destroyed by order of General Houston. Mr. Steele gives an interesting description of the battle of San Jacinto, which took place on that day. He says:

"After dinner on April 21 Santa Ana, who was close upon us, received about 500 additional troops under command of General Cos. We received orders to prepare for battle. We advanced upon the Mexicans in the following order: Houston, with his artillery, in the center; the cavalry on the right and Colonel Sherman with his troops on our left. The Mexicans had thrown up breastworks out of their baggage about 100 yards south of a belt of timber, where they had stationed their artillery.

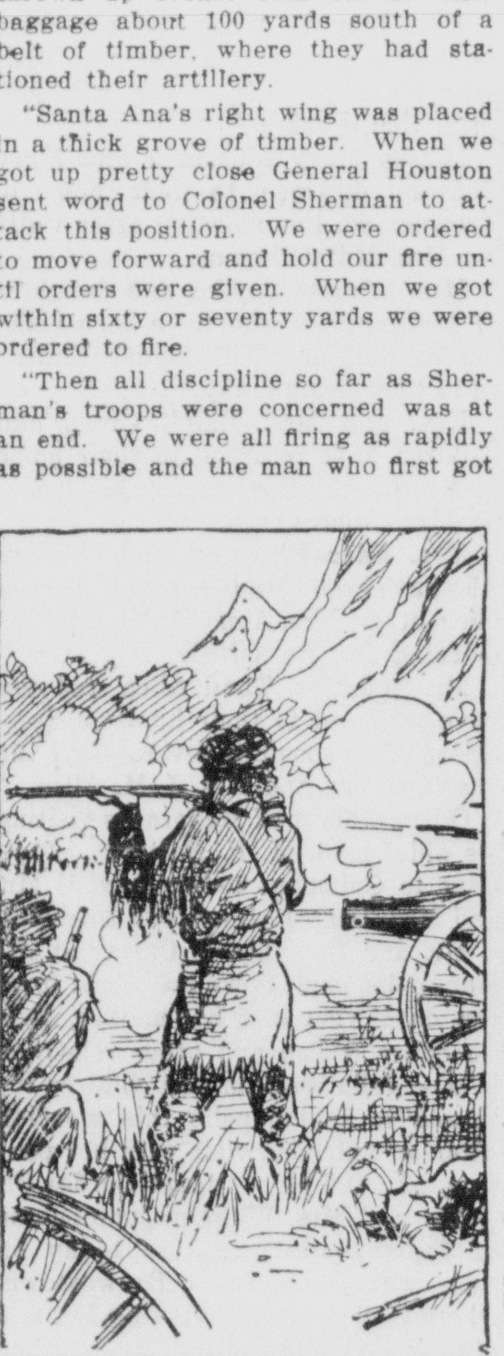

"Santa Ana's right wing was placed in a thick grove of timber. When we got up pretty close General Houston sent word to Colonel Sherman to attack this position. We were ordered to move forward and hold our fire until orders were given. When we got within sixty or seventy yards we were ordered to fire.

"Then all discipline so far as Sherman's troops were concerned was at an end. We were all firing as rapidly as possible and the man who first got his gun reloaded moved on, not waiting for orders. I rushed into the timber and fired again. When the second volley was poured into them in that timber they broke and ran.

"I was running on a little in front of our men when I was shot down. 'Dave' Rusk was standing by me when I was shot. He told some of the men to stay with me, but I told him, 'No, take them on.'"

"One of our men in passing asked me if he could take my pistol, but by this time I was bleeding at the nose and mouth so I couldn't speak; so he just stooped down and got it and went on. After lying there a little while I managed to arise to a sitting posture and drink some water which I had in a gourd. This stopped the blood from coming into my nose and mouth. While I was sitting there one of our men who had been lying down behind me came up and asked me if I was wounded. I told him I was, and he offered to stay with me, which offer I accepted."

We Were All Firing as Rapidly as Possible.

POULTRY

SCALDING A FOWL PROPERLY

Any Aged Bird May Be Treated Without Injuring Its Quality If Handled in Right Way.

So great is the possibility of scalding the fowl improperly that dealers in some localities show an inclination to demand dry plucked fowls. As a means of overcoming this difficulty, C. K. Graham of Connecticut, who has spent a good deal of time in studying the subject, offers these suggestions: Any aged bird may be scalded without seriously injuring its quality if it is properly handled; but owing to the large number of poorly dressed scalded fowls, the marketmen place a premium of from 1 to 2 cents a pound on dry plucked stock.

Boiling water may be used, but care must be taken not to leave young birds in the water too long, or the skin will cook, while with old fowls a little more time may not do any harm. The head and shanks should be kept out of the water, as the scalding will discolor them and make them unsightly. Immediately after the bird is taken from the scalding water it should be dipped into cold water to stop the cook, and, as poultrymen say, to "plump the bird."

The bird should then be hung as for dry plucking, as no bird plucked on the lap or the table will have so good an appearance. If a scalded bird is exposed to a draught when being plucked or when cooling, the skin is likely to harden and become rough. It is because of these possibilities that dry plucking is recommended, as the condition of the skin to a great extent accounts for the high or low returns received.

MOVABLE ROOSTS AND NESTS

Nothing More Convenient in Cleaning Than Long Saw-Horse in Fight Against Little Parasites.

After trying all sorts and types of roosts and roost-poles, I am convinced that nothing is better than a long saw-horse, says a writer in the Farm, Mail and Breeze. A roost of this type, set on a smooth floor, and with removable nest boxes, makes it possible to keep the henhouse perfectly clean at all times. The main difficulty experienced in cleaning the house is the obstructions, these being usually the roosts and nests. If they can be taken out quickly and handily, and nothing left but a bare room with a smooth board floor, the work of cleaning becomes an easy task.

Once a week I give the henhouses a cleaning. The nest boxes are first taken out, the straw dumped and burned and the boxes themselves whitewashed and aired. Before being returned they are supplied with clean straw. Treatment of this sort is "death on bugs."

The saw-horse roosts undergo the same cleaning process, being taken out, brushed and whitewashed. The henhouse floor is then swept clean and the whole interior given a new sprinkle of whitewash. Should lice or mites be manifest, an additional treatment of chloride of lime is given, but this is seldom necessary.

There is profit in raising chickens when they are properly handled.

Dump the litter from the nests of tender now and burn it just as soon as dumped.

Poultry wire tacked over a shallow box makes a good feeder for bran or a dry mash.

Hens over two years old are seldom good layers, and unless good as breeders should be disposed of.

For the first meal a hard-boiled egg mixed with dry bread crumbs is best. Stale bread soak in milk and squeezed dry is good.

The farmer can produce a pound of chicken as cheaply as he can a pound of beef, pork or mutton, and it always brings a better price.

Sell off the scrub chickens and have only one breed. This is especially so with the beginner. One breed at a time and perfect that.

Some varieties stand confinement better than others. Consider this when choosing a breed if you must keep them closely yarded.

If chickens raised in a brooder are not rendered weak and tender by too much heat, and not enough ventilation, they grow rapidly and make early layers.

All houses and nests should be clean for best results. Fight lice all the year around. There are some essentials in poultry that must be attended to. This is one of them.

The poultry business is yet in its infancy and offers a good living for those who take it up as a business, carefully looking into the conditions, such as breeds, markets, location, etc.

Icy Hill Kills Rabbits.

Coatesville, Pa.—Mountain hill, on the Pennsy's low-grade line, has become a veritable shambles for starving rabbits that nest in the rocks on the summit of the declivity.

The Columbia wrecking crew found 37 at the bottom of the hill with their brains dashed out. The hill is covered with a smooth sheet of ice, and as the famished creatures come unsuspectingly to hunt food their feet slip out from under them and they shoot at lightning speed down the incline.

CHAPTER VII.

A Distant Menace.

But guests come and guests go; pastimes draw to a close, and the hour arrives when the curtain falls on the masque. The friends of my lady, however reluctantly, were obliged at last to forgo further holiday-making, depart from the Mount, and return to the court. An imposing cavalcade, gleaming in crimson and gold, they wended down the dark rock; laughing ladies, pranked-out cavaliers who waved their perfumed hands with farewell kisses to the grim stronghold in the desert, late their palace of pleasure, and to the young mistress thereof.

"Good-by, Elise!" The marquises last to go.

"Good-by."

He took her hand; held it to his lips. On the whole, he was not ill-pleased. His wooing had apparently prospered, for, although the marriage had been long arranged, my lady's beauty and capriciousness had fanned in him the desire to appear a successful suitor for her heart as well as her hand. If sometimes she laughed and thus failed to receive his delicate gallantries in the mood in which they were tendered, the marquises' vanity only allowed him to conclude that a woman does not laugh if she is displeased. It was enough that she found him diverting; he served her; they were friends and had danced and ridden through the spring days in amicable fashion.

"Good-by," he repeated. "When are you coming to court again? The queen is sure to ask. I understand her majesty is planning all manner of brilliant entertainments, yet Versailles—without you, Elise!"

"Me?" arching her finely penciled brows. "Oh, I'm thinking of staying here, becoming a nun, and restoring the Mount to its old religious prestige."

"Then I'll come back a monk," he returned in the same tone.

"If you come back at all!" provokingly. "There, go! The others will soon be out of sight!"

"I, too—alas, Elise!"

He touched his horse; rode on, but soon looked back to where, against a great, grim wall, stood a figure all in white gleaming in the sunshine. The marquises stopped; drew from his breast a deep red rose, and, gazing upward, gracefully kissed the glowing token. Beneath the aureole of golden hair my lady's proud face rewarded him with a faint smile, and something—a tiny handkerchief—fluttered like a dove above the frowning, time-worn rock. At that, with the eloquent gesture of a troubadour, he threw his arm backward, as if to launch the impress on the rose to the crimson lips of the girl, and then, plying his spurs, galloped off.

And as he went at a pace, headlong if not dangerous and fitting the exigencies of the moment, my lord smiled. Truly had he presented a perfect, dainty and gallant figure for any woman's eyes, and the Lady Elise, he fancied, was not the least discerning of her sex. And had he seen the girl, when an unkind angle of the wall hid him from sight, his own nice estimate of the situation would have suffered no change. The Mount, which formerly had resounded to the life and merriment of the people from the court, on a sudden to her looked cold, barren, empty.

"Heigh-ho!" she murmured, stretching her arms toward that point where he—she—had vanished. "I shall die of ennui, I am sure!" And thoughtfully retraced her steps to her own room.

But she did not long stay there; by way of makeshift for gaiety, substituted activity. The Mount, full of early recollections and treasure-house mystery, furnished an incentive for exploration, and for several days she devoted herself to its study; now pausing for an instant's contemplation of a sculptured thing of beauty, then before some closed door that held her, as at the threshold of a Bluebeard's forbidden chamber.

One day, such a door stood open and her curiosity became curdled. She had passed beneath a machicolated gateway, and climbing a stairway that began in a watch-tower, found herself unexpectedly on a great platform. Here several men, unkempt, pale, like creatures from another world, were walking to and fro; but at sight of her, an order was issued and they vanished through a trap—all save one, a misshapen dwarf who remained to shut the iron door, adjust the fastening and turn a ponderous key. For a moment she stood staring.

"Why did you do that?" she asked angrily.

"The governor's orders," said the man, bowing hideously. "They are to see no one."

"Then let them up at once. Do you hear? At once!"

And as he began to unlock the door, walked off. After that, her interest in the rock waned; the Mount seemed but a prison; she, herself, desired only to escape from it.

"Have my saddle put on Saladin," she said to Beppo the next day, toward the end of a long afternoon.

"Very well, my lady. Who accompanies your ladyship?"

"No one!" With slight emphasis. "I ride alone."

Beppo discretely suppressed his surprise. "Is your ladyship going far? If so, I beg to remind that tonight is the change of the moon, and the 'grand,' not the 'little' tide may be coming in."

"I was already aware of it, and shall keep between the Mount and the shore. Have my horse sent to the upper gate," she added, and soon afterward rode down.

The town was astir, and many looked after her as she passed; not kindly, but with the varying expressions she had of late begun to notice. Again was she cognizant of that feeling of secret antagonism, even from these people whose houses clung to the very foundations of her own abode, and her lips set tightly. Why did they hate her? What right had they to hate her? A sensation, almost of relief, came over her, when passing through the massive, feudal gate, she found herself on the beach.

Still and languorous was the day; not a breath stirred above the tiny ripples of the sand; a calm, almost unnatural, seemed to wrap the world in its embrace. The girl breathed deeper, feeling the closeness of the air; her impatient eyes looked around; scanned the shore; to the left, low and flat—to the right, marked by the dark fringe of a forest. Which way should she go? Irresolutely she turned in the direction of the wood.

Saladin, her horse, seemed in unusually fine fettle, and the distance separating her from the land was soon covered; but still she continued to follow the shore, swinging around and out toward a point some distance seaward. Not until she had reached that extreme projection of land, where the wooing green crept out from the forest as far as it might, did she draw rein. Saladin stopped, albeit with protest, tossing his great head.

"You might as well make an end of that, sir!" said the girl, and, springing from the saddle, deftly secured him. Then turning her back toward the Mount, a shadowy pyramid in the distance, she seated herself in the grass with her eyes to the woods.

Not long, however, did my lady remain thus; soon rising, she walked toward the shadowy depths. At the verge, she paused; her brows grew thoughtful; what was it the woods recalled? Suddenly, she remembered—a boy she had met the night she left for school so long ago had told her he lived in them. She recalled, too, as a child, how the woman, Marie, who had been maid to her mother, had tried to frighten her about that sequestered domain, with tales of fierce wild animals and unearthly creatures, visible and invisible, that roamed within.

She had no fear now, though faint rustlings and a pulsation of sound held her listening. Then, through the leafy interstice, a gleaming and flashing, as if some one were throwing jewels to the earth, lured her on to the cause of the seeming enchantment—a tiny waterfall!

The moment passed; still she lingered. Around the Mount's high top, her own home, only transcendent silence reigned; here was she surrounded by babbling voices and all manner of merry creatures—lively little squirrels; winged insects, romping in the twilight shade; a portly and well-satisfied appearing green monster who regarded her amicably from a niche of green. A butterfly, poised and waving its wings, held her a long time—until she was suddenly aroused by the wood growing darker. Raising her eyes, she saw through the green foliage overhead that the bright sky had become sunless. At the same time a rumbling detonation, faint, far-off, broke in upon the whisperings and tinklings of that wood nook. Getting up, she stood for a moment listening; then walked away.

Near the verge of the sand, Saladin greeted her with impatience, tossing his head toward the darkening heavens. Nor did he wait until she was fairly seated before starting back at a rapid gate along the shore. But the girl offered no protest; her face showed only enjoyment. A little wild he might be at times, as became one of rugged ancestry, but never vicious, only headstrong! And she didn't mind that—

Already had he begun to slack that first thundering pace when something white—a veil, perhaps, dropped from the cavalcade of lords and ladies some days before on the land and waited to the beach—fluttered like a live thing suddenly before him. In his tense mood, Saladin, affrighted, sprang to one side; then wheeling outright, madly took the bit in his teeth. Perforce his mistress resigned herself, sitting straight and sure, with little hands hard and firm at the reins. Saladin was behaving very badly, but—at least he was superb, worth conquering, if—

A brief thrill of apprehension seized her as, again drawing near the point of land, he showed no signs of yielding, resisted all her attempts to turn, to direct him to it. With nostrils thrust forward and breathing strong, he continued to choose his own course; to whirl her on; past the promontory; around into the great bay beyond—now a vast expanse, or desert of sand, broken only, about halfway across, by the small isle of Casque. Toward this rocky formation, a pygmy to the great Mount from which it lay concealed by the intervening projection of land, the horse rushed.

On, on! In vain she still endeavored to stop him; thinking uneasily of stories the fishermen told of this neighboring coast; of the sands that often shifted here, setting pitfalls for the unwary. She saw the sky grow yet darker, noted the nearer flashings of light, and heard the louder rumblings that followed. Then presently another danger she had long been conscious of, on a sudden became real.

She saw, or thought she saw, a faint streak, like a silver line drawn across the sky where the yellow sands touched the somber horizon. And Saladin seemed to observe it, too; to detect in it cause for wonder; reason for hesitation. At any rate, that headlong speed now showed signs of diminishing; he clipped and tossed the sand less vigorously, and looked around at his mistress with wild, uneasy eyes. Again she spoke to him; pulled with all her strength at the reins, and, at once, he stopped.

None too soon! Great drops of rain had begun to fall, but the girl did not notice them. The white line alone riveted her attention! It seemed to grow broader; to acquire an intangible movement of its own; at the same time to give out a sound—a strange, low droning that filled the air. Heard for the first time, a stranger at the Mount would have found it inexplicable; to the Governor's daughter, the menacing cadence left no room for doubt as to its origin.

The girl's cheeks paled; her gaze swung in the opposite direction, toward the point of land, now so distant. Could they reach it? She did not believe they could; indeed, the "grand" tide coming up behind on the verge of the storm, faster than any horse could gallop, would overtake them midway. And Saladin seemed to know it also; beneath her, he trembled. Yet must they try, she thought, and had tightened the reins to turn, when looking ahead once more, she discerned a break in the forbidding cliffs of the little island of Casque, and, back of the fissure, a shining spot which marked a tiny cove.

A moment she hesitated; what should she do? Ride toward the isle and the white danger, or toward the point of mainland and from it? Either alternative was a desperate one, but the isle lay much nearer; and quickly, the brown eyes gleaming with sudden courage, she decided; touched her horse and pressed him forward.

But fast as she went the "grand" tide came faster; struck with a loud, menacing sound the seaward side of the isle and swung hungrily around. My lady cast over her shoulder a quick glance; the cove, however, was near; only a line of small rocks, jutting from the sand, separated her from it. If they could but pass, she thought; they had passed, she told herself joyfully, when of a sudden the horse stumbled; fell. Thrown violently from his back, a moment was she cognizant of a deafening roar; a riotous advance of foam; above, a hundred birds that screamed distractedly; then all these sounds mingled; darkness succeeded, and she remembered no more.

CHAPTER VIII.

The Old Watch-Tower.

A wall! A window—a prison-like interior! As her eyes opened, the Governor's daughter strove confusedly to decipher her surroundings. The wall seemed real; the narrow window, too, high above, framing, against a darkening background, a slant of fine rain! Again she closed her eyes, only to be conscious of a gentle languor; a heaviness like that of half-sleep; of bodily heat, and also a little bodily pain. For an indefinite period, really a moment or two, she resigned herself to that dreamy torpor; then, with an effort, lifted her lashes once more.

As she gazed before her, something bright seemed leaping back and forth; a flame—that played on the wall; revealing the joints between the stones of massive masonry; casting shadows, but to wipe them out; paling near a small window, the only aperture apparent in the cell-like place. Turning from the flickering, her glance quickly sought their source—a fire in a hearth, before which she lay—or half-sat, propped against a stone.

But why? The spot was strange; in her ears sounded a buzzing, like the murmur of a waterfall. She remembered now; she had lingered before one—in the woods; and Saladin had run away, madly, across the sands, until—my lady raised her hand to her brow; abruptly let it fall. In the shadow on the other side of the hearth some one moved; some one who had been watching her and who now stepped out into the light.

"Are you better?" said a voice.

She stared. On the bold, swarthy features of a young man now standing and looking down at her, the light flared and gleamed; the open shirt revealed a muscular throat; the downturned black eyes were steady, solicitous. His appearance was unexpected, yet not quite strange; she had seen him before, but, in the general surprise and perplexity of the moment, did not ask herself where. The interval between what she last remembered on the beach—the rush and swirl of water—and what she woke to, absorbed the hazy workings of her mind.

The young man stopped; stirred the fire, and after a pause, apparently to give her time to collect her thoughts, repeated his question: "Are you better, now?"

"Oh, yes," she said, with an effort, half sitting up. And then irrelevantly,

"At Times—a Hunter."

with rather a wild glance about her: "Isn't— isn't it storming outside?"

"A little—not much—" A smile crossed the dark features.

"I remember," she added, as if forcing herself to speak, "it had just begun to on the beach, when it—the 'grand' tide—" The words died away; mechanically she lifted her hand, brushed back the shining waves of her hair.

"Why think of it now?" he interposed gently.

"But," uncertainly she smoothed her skirt; it was damp and warm; "I suppose this is the island of Casque?"

"Yes."

"And this place?"

"The old watch-tower."

"But how—" Then she noticed that his hands, long, brown and well-formed, were cut and bruised; bore many jagged marks as from a fierce struggle. "How did you hurt your hands?"

He thrust them into his pockets.

"Was it from the rocks—and the waves? How did I get here?"

"Oh, I was standing on the cliff," he answered carelessly, "and—saw your horse running away!"

"You did? And then—came down?"

"What else was there to do?" he said simply.

Her gaze returned to the fire. "But the tide was rushing in—rushing! It was right upon me!"

She looked again toward the pockets into which his hands were thrust; observed his shirt, torn at the shoulder; then arose unsteadily. "I know—it was not so easy!" she said. "It was brave of you—"

"Your Ladyship is no coward!" he interrupted, a sparkle in his eyes. "When you turned the horse toward the tide, I was watching; hoping you would dare, and you did!"

About to reply, she became once more aware she was still very dizzy from the fall on the sand; the shapely figure swayed and she put out her hand with a gesture of helplessness. At the same time, the man reached forward quickly and caught her. A moment was she conscious of a firm grasp; a dark, anxious gaze bent upon her; then, slid gently back to the stone seat.

A brief interval, and gradually she began to see again more distinctly—a man's face, not far from hers; a face that drew back as her own look cleared. At a respectful distance he now stood, his bearing at once erect and buoyant, and more curiously she regarded him. A distinct type, here pride and intelligence stamped themselves strongly on the dark, handsome features; courage and daring were written on the bold, self-reliant brow. And with this realization of something distinctive, compelling, in his personality, came another.

"I have seen you—spoken with you before! On the beach—the night of the dance!"

The young man turned. "Your Ladyship so far honored me—as to dance with me!" he said, in his eyes a touch of that brightness that had caused her to regard him imperiously, as he had swung her to the measure of the music, on the occasion of a question.

"Started to!" She corrected him, straightening suddenly; at the recollection of that evening, when humility and modesty were virtues conspicuously wanting to his demeanor.

"Your Ladyship is right," he said quietly. "An alarm from the Mount interrupted."

She glanced at him quickly. His eyes met hers with a look of unconcern.

"Are you—a fisherman?" she asked abruptly.

"On occasions."

"And when you are not one—what are you then?"

"At times—a hunter."

"Ah!" Her eye lingered on something bright on the ledge beneath the window. "And that is the reason you have—pistols?"

"Exactly, my Lady!"

She continued to regard the weapons, of finest workmanship, inlaid with a metal that gleamed dully, like gold, in the light from the fire. His glance followed hers; she was about to speak, when quickly he interrupted.

"Has your Ladyship thought how she is going to get back to the Mount?"

My lady's questioning, along the line of personal inquiry, ceased; the Governor's daughter looked a little blank. "No—that is, haven't you a boat?"

"Not here."

"Then you walked over?"

He neither affirmed, nor denied.

"And the tide will not be out for hours!" Her look showed consternation; she glanced toward the opening in the wall. "Isn't it becoming dark now?"

"Yes, my Lady."

"Of course, it was almost sundown when— But I must return at once! Don't you understand?"

He regarded her silently; the beautiful, impatient eyes; the slim, white fingers that tapped restlessly, one against another. "I will do what I can!" he said at last slowly.

"But what?" she demanded. "What can you do?"

He did not answer; my lady made a gesture. "How ridiculous! A prisoner on an island!"

"There may be a way," he began.

"My horse?" she said quickly. "What became of him?"

"He was swept away by the tide!"

Into the proud eyes came a softer light—of regret, pain.

"Your Ladyship should remember it might have been worse," he added, in tones intended to reassure her. "After all, it was only a horse—"

"Only a horse!" she exclaimed indignantly. "But, I suppose you can't understand—caring for a horse!"

"I can understand caring for a ship!" he answered quickly, a flash of amusement, hardly concealed, in his bold, dark eyes.

"A ship!" scornfully; "dead wood and iron."

"Live wood and iron! Beautiful as—" The simile failed him; he looked at my lady. "Something to be depended on, with a hand to the wheel, and an eye keen for mad dances and curvettings."

"I might appreciate them better," she interrupted dryly, with delicate brows uplifted, "if they brought me nearer to the Mount. That, and not idle opinions," in accents that conveyed surprise at the temerity of one in his position to express them, "is of most moment!"

He accepted the reproach with a readiness that further surprised her. "Your Ladyship is right," he said. "I will see what may be done. The storm has passed. There is yet daylight, and—" an expression, almost preoccupied, came to his features—"a boat may be sighted."

"To be sure!" At the prospect, all other considerations passed from my lady's mind. "A boat may be sighted! Why did you not think of it before? Come! Too much time has already been lost." And she rose.

"One moment!" His voice was quiet; respectful; although, she fancied, constrained. "I had better go alone. The way to the cliff is rough, and—"

"I shall not mind that!"

"Besides, your clothes—"

"Are dry!"

"No!" She flushed at the abrupt contradiction. "I mean, I don't see how they could be!" he went on hurriedly, "and," his tone assumed a certain odour, "I assure your Ladyship, it will be best."

"Best?" She looked at him more sharply. "Is that your only reason?"

"Why?" A trace of embarrassment, for an instant, crossed his dark features. "What other reason, my Lady?"

"That I know not!" quickly, assured her words had struck home. "Only I am certain there is one!"

"Then, if your Ladyship must know," he spoke slowly. "I did not wish to alarm you. But this is a rough coast, with—many rough people about—smugglers, privateersmen—"

"Whom you, perhaps, are expecting?" she cried suddenly.

"I!" with a careless laugh. "A fisherman! Your Ladyship is imaginative," he began, when a sudden, hasty footstep clinked on the stones without; a hand caught at the fastenings of the door; flung it open.

"I thought I should find you here, Seigneur!" exclaimed a voice. Since—

The young man made a movement and the speaker stopped; caught sight of my lady, just beyond, in the fading light. And at the picture—her figure behind that other one—the fine, patrician features, framed by the disordered golden hair, the widely opened eyes, bright, expectant, the intruder started back.

"The Governor's daughter! You, Seigneur!" he stammered, and, raising his hand, involuntarily crossed himself.
